DIVERSE CITIZENRY + DIVERSE EMPLOYERS

To compete in this global environment, diverse perspectives are of critical importance. The world is strengthened by students like Chris Wilburn, a mechanical engineering major and communication design minor. He will combine conceptual creativity with structural innovation during his summer internship at Boeing.

Global citizens build global businesses.

Leaders in today’s marketplace understand that diversity is key to succeed in business: from teams to suppliers to community members.

Washington University is committed to demographic, experiential and intellectual diversity. Nearly two-thirds of students pursue multiple majors and/or minors, and the majority of undergrads have completed coursework in social differentiation and cultural diversity. Different perspectives, shared in the spirit of collaboration, strengthen the global community.

Nearly 40% of Washington University students are African American, Hispanic American, multiracial or international students.
