Timely insight – the type that changes business – does not always come from traditional sources. It demands a different view, a broader perspective. It requires students like Deeksha Bhat, an intern at Bain & Company. Majoring in International and Area Studies and Economics, Deeksha draws on global perspectives to produce smart business solutions.
Disciplined solutions require multiple disciplines.

Our students’ critical thinking skills are the result of Washington University’s rigorous, multidisciplinary, problem-solving curriculum.

Students are encouraged to take classes across disciplines and choose from more than 90 undergraduate programs and 1,500 courses.

Two out of three students pursue multiple majors and/or minors, often in a different school.
