My goal... improving and empowering the communities around me.

Rocking out with the stereotypes

Getting to know myself...

For me, college has been a process of finding myself and then translating that new knowledge into a career I want to pursue.

My experience at Wash. U. opened my eyes to the world of social work. Through a class with Professor Kirkland, I learned about community development efforts in East St. Louis.

Marcus Brown (right), shown with Professor Jack Kirkland, will graduate in May 2013 with an urban studies major. This summer, he worked with Kirkland on an East St. Louis community development project.

Bringing my story to life...

As a Gephardt Goldman Fellow, I undertook the project as a career pathway to social economic development in social work, and to showcase the revitalization of East St. Louis with "The Helping Village." My internship spanned over the first phase of development. Engaging in site visits to federal agencies, businesses, and community centers aided our work.

Up next... Fusing my passion for people and social impact to improve and empower entire communities.

FROM PASSION SPRINGS PURPOSE

Optimize your experience. When you’re at the crossroads of coasting or challenging yourself - choose to challenge yourself.

Marcus’ Career Tip

1,500+
Internships and jobs currently posted in CAREERlink

THIS WEEK’S OPPORTUNITIES

Burns & McDonnell Engineering Co.
Advisory Board Company
Green Corps
Food Research and Action Center (FRAC)
Yurbuds

National Nuclear Security Administration
KSDK NewsChannel 5
Swank Motion Pictures
Hallmark
Nomura

EVENTS

Oct. 16
Alumni Career Internship (ACE) Info Session
Teach For America Info Session

Oct. 17
US Department of State Internship Panel
Peace Corps Info Session

Oct. 19
Sophomore GPS

For more information visit careercenter.wustl.edu